How to Avoid Home Improvement/Home Repair Fraud

Most of us want to stay in our homes as we get older. One way we can stay in our homes is to make sure our home changes as our physical needs change. A few simple changes inside and outside our home can make it safer, more convenient, and more comfortable and help us to enjoy living in our home longer.

Unfortunately, in attempting to do the necessary home repairs and modifications, too many seniors fall prey to incompetent or fraudulent home repair contractors. The result can range from poor workmanship, missed deadlines and cost overruns to job abandonment or failure to do the work at all. Once your money is taken you probably will never see it again.

Most home improvement contractors are hard-working, honest business people. Here are some tips on recognizing home repair scams and finding a competent, trustworthy contractor who will do your home repair or improvement work at a price you can afford.

Senior Safety

Possible signs of a home repair scam:

- Strangers coming to your door offering to do repairs driving an unmarked vehicle.
- Door-to-door salespeople claiming "We've just finished a job nearby and have material left over, so we can do your job for half the price".
- A Post Office Box with no street address, or a telephone number that is just an answering service.
- High-pressure sales tactics that include trying to rush you into making decisions.
- Refusal to give you a written estimate, contract or references.
- Requirements for a large down payment up front.

If this happens to you, do not do business with these contractors and report them to the Sheriff's Office and the Better Business Bureau immediately.

Tips on Finding a Competent, Honest Contractor

- Do your homework: Find out what work your project requires. If you know in advance what you want done and what you can afford, you are less likely to be the victim of high-pressure sales.
- Shop around for a contractor: Ask for recommendations from people you know and trust, such as friends, neighbors, and relatives who have had work done on their homes. It's usually better to find a reputable local contractor who will be around later if adjustments are needed. Don't rely solely on advertisements to choose a contractor. Don't believe everything you read or hear.
- Get at least three written estimates: Make sure you give all contractors who bid on the job the same exact specifications.
- Ask for a list of previous customers who have had similar work done: Fraudulent contractors frequently give fake references, be sure to ask the references lots of questions. If possible, try to inspect the work.
- Ask to see the contractor's license and insurance certificate and check to see if they are valid: On major projects involving subcontractors, ask them to post a bond or provide you with a lien waiver to protect you if the contractor fails to pay his subcontractors. Ask the contractor to apply for a building permit in the business name of the company.
- Always obtain a written contract: including all work to be done, the total price, quality of materials to be used, warranties or guarantees, a start and finish date, and whose responsibility it will be for trash removal. Be sure to examine the contract closely before signing it. Remember that if you sign it at home, you have three business days to cancel it.
- Set up a schedule of payments and avoid a large advance payment: Make payments regularly as the job progresses, but don't make your final payment until the work is completed to insure that it is done right. For smaller jobs, it's best not to pay anything until after the work is completed to your satisfaction.
- Keep careful records: Keep a file with all papers related to the job.
